

Fernando La Ray

University of Washington Application Essay

October 28, 2019

Prompt 1: Tell a story from your life, describing an experience that either demonstrates your character or helped to shape it.

In high school, most students look uniform. We attend the same classes, chat while eating lunch during breaks, and struggle to meet the expectations of our teachers. But, if you look closely, you will discover something unique about each of us. A tall earnest girl surrounded by a group of friends is the cheerleading captain. I guess she is a true leader by nature. Or, look at the shy boy in shabby jeans. He is the chess champion at our school. And what about me? Well, I am not a top student and not a sports team captain. But, I run a small blog that highlights the major events of our school. I enjoy writing and I hope people like my posts as well.

To tell the truth, I did not strive to be a blogger. Occasionally, I helped to write a few articles for our high school newspaper. Teachers liked the way I covered ordinary things, such as the start of a new term or the launch of a new sports team. However, no one used to read the school newspaper. It was merely for teachers to know that they report school news in some way. Last year, I suggested posting our news on the web, where most students can easily read and comment on it. I do not imply that daily papers are on their way out. We just need some convenient means of delivering news to teenagers. And, we managed it wonderfully.

For some people, writing is boring. For me, it is an excellent way of bringing my ideas to the world. As I work on another article, I pick details that will interest my friends the most. With speaking, you have to deliver your message right away. In writing, I can take my time and create and form ideas with caution and grace . There is no need to hurry and no reason for empty words. Maybe, this is just a trick my introverted personality plays. But, I do not mind missing big parties and spending time on my favorite hobbies.

Becoming a school blogger also made me more involved in the social life of my peers. I started enjoying school parties, sports championships, and art exhibitions that had made little impression on me before. I can see why my peers like these events more than I do. And, it is fine for people to have different interests. Surprisingly, running a blog showed me that trying new activities or visiting strange places can be fun. In this way, I can discover more interesting hobbies and live a more fulfilling life.

Prompt 2: Our families and communities often define us and our individual worlds. A community might refer to your cultural group, extended family, religious group, neighborhood or school, sports team or club, coworkers, etc. Describe the world you come from and how you, as a product of it, might add to the diversity of the UW.

As a high school graduate, I interact with many people. My peers, teachers, and friends. All of them have contributed to my habits, preferences, choices, and other essential parts of being me. I often look up to famous personalities as I try to develop new habits and improve myself. But, my parents still are the two people who have shaped my personality to the greatest extent.

My parents are doctors. They still work hard to make sure that our family feels comfortable and secure. My grandparents immigrated from Mexico when my father was a little boy, and I can imagine how much more difficult life was back then. My family took care that I grew up to be a caring and compassionate person. So, when I decided not to go into healthcare, mom and dad supported this decision.

My ambition to become a journalist has much to do with the values we share in our family. We all strive to improve our society in some way. We can achieve it as we improve ourselves first and as we help others build effective communication. I believe all of us can find a common language in such a diverse American society. I am sure the University of Washington is an excellent place to develop and learn journalism alongside other social sciences.

We can always help you write an admission essay for the university of your dream.

Order help

Get free quote

